Markets closed in the red, albeit off of their worst levels. The Dow Jones ended lower by 138 points to 12,502, the S&P 500 gave up 21 points to 1314, and the NASDAQ shed 56 points to 2836. Composite volume on the NYSE was 3.3 billion shares with declining issues besting advancers by a 7-2 margin. The NASDAQ was 3-1 negative on issues. Stocks tested their session lows throughout the day as concerns over the European debt crisis overshadowed some positive economic reports. New home sales in May showed improvement, while manufacturing in the Dallas region surpassed projections. Despite the better-than-expected data, a gloomy outlook for the EU summit and Spain's request for financial assistance weighed heavily on the major averages. All 10 sectors on the S&P ended lower, led by declines in tech stocks. Apple gave up $11.34 to $570.76 and Microsoft fell 84 cents to $29.86 in the session. Energy stocks were also under pressure as crude oil retreated 41 cents to $79.35 per barrel. Exxon closed in the red by 87 cents to $81.24 and Chevron shed $1.36 to $99.08. In other news, Bristol-Myers Squibb fell $1.23 to $34.13 and Pfizer was down 26 cents to $22.47 after the FDA rejected an application for the companies' joint-venture anti-clotting drug. Turning to the fixed income market, Treasuries were higher along the curve with the benchmark 10-year note advancing 5/8 of a point to yield 1.61%.
