Honorary Family Story

Charles Pappas and his wife, MaryJo Pappas, were both diagnosed with Alzheimer's and both ultimately succumbed to the disease at the age of 92. Their family considers themselves blessed because Charles and MaryJo didn't develop the most debilitating symptoms until late in life.

The Pappas raised four children, had many good years with their eight grandchildren, and were able to stay in their home until they were in their late 80s. Charles stayed active and continued operating his restaurant business until he was 88 years old. The family's Alzheimer's story is one of thankfulness and good fortune. Charles and MaryJo were able to spend their final few years living together in comfort due to the extraordinary support of professional caregivers. The family will join the Walk to End Alzheimer's in Rochester in their honor.
